It's been a week since I last posted, but I've been having some exciting news to share with you all. First of all, version 1.4.5 of Cabal, the most popular of the Rainmeter extensions for Windows, was released this week. It includes a bunch of new features and enhancements, including support for iTunes playlists and multiple modules on the desktop. Cabal 1.4.5 (build x86) can be downloaded here: Cabal 1.4.5 The release notes can be found here: Cabal 1.4.5 Release Notes If you are an iTunes user, I highly recommend checking out the new play button in Cabal 1.4.5. It uses the iTunes API to get a list of the tracks in your iTunes library and displays them all on your desktop. Thanks to everyone who has downloaded the new release and reported bugs! If you are a Windows fan, we have some exciting news for you as well. We are going to be adding support for Windows 7 soon. I'll have more details soon.]]>2010-10-19T13:01:11-04:00 UPDATE: How to get your files back! (and probably some other things) If you've been running Windows 7 recently, you probably

The darkness of this one is due to the desktop background I'm using. It's taken from this picture: On W3 you'll see the floating text, the links and whatnot. If you like it, use the dark variant. I know this image is a bit too dark, but I can't seem to get it better. A new theme, #353, is coming up soon, so I'll edit my theme description.

For now, make sure you run Cabal with a "dark" wallpaper. Let me know if you have any trouble.
