The study analysed data from the Scottish Cancer Registry on all cancers in children (0-19 years) diagnosed between 1995 and 2004. The researchers used information provided by the cancer registry to identify which of the children with cancer had been diagnosed in Scottish hospital. The researchers also used geographical indicators to examine how common the cancers were in different parts of Scotland. The researchers discovered that in 2004 the most common cancers were brain tumours (27.5 per 100,000), leukaemia (26.7 per 100,000), and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma (22.3 per 100,000). According to the Paediatricians, the study's findings are useful for paediatric oncologists in developing effective strategies for early cancer detection and treatment in children. As part of the study, researchers also measured the impact that Scots had on inequalities in cancer incidence and survival throughout Scotland between 1995 and 2004. For every child who died from cancer, there were approximately 3.5 children who survived cancer and who were living with cancer between 1995 and 2004. The study found that geographical variations in cancer rates existed in Scotland. The study measured this variation using the Scottish Index of Multiple Deprivation (SIMD), a composite index of deprivation which is calculated from data covering 37% of the national population. 'This research highlights the importance of measuring inequalities in cancer incidence and survival throughout Scotland,' said Professor Liz Smith, Edinburgh Paediatricians. 'The identification of common childhood cancers which are preventable, or which are treatable if diagnosed early, is an important step in developing effective strategies for improving children's survival.' Children with cancer who live in more affluent areas tend to be more likely to receive treatment in a specialist centre rather

Failed to connect to MySQL: Host 'localhost' is not allowed to connect to this MySQL server. I just installed phpMyAdmin, and even if I access directly to localhost/phpMyAdmin it works. I have tried to change the host, but it has no effect. I would like to make a default host for phpMyAdmin, What should I do? A: If you want to use a remote host (running a MySQL database) for localhost (wamp) I would suggest using the Server IP rather than Localhost. When using the IP address you can use phpMyAdmin via instead of and you will bypass this error.
