Use a mini-split to isolate heat and a HVAC system to circulate hot air — so you'll be comfortable all year round. A mini-split is a system of mini-ducts that heat or cool a room when the temperature in the room is different to the temperature of the ducted air. The ducting is usually used in a mini-split system to distribute air throughout a space. Mini-splits are a great way to cool or heat your home as a more cost-effective and flexible option to conventional central air conditioners. If you're considering adding an HVAC system to your home, you'll need to check the energy ratings, AC (air conditioning) ratings and ventilation ratings of your room. Use the table below to work out whether you will need a single duct or two ducts, for example, for two rooms of the same size. Alternatively, check out our article on buying an HVAC system for your home, where you can find out more on the specifications to look for when buying an HVAC. As you can see, in most cases, mini-splits heat up a room and will require ductwork to be installed. If your room is small and there is one single duct installed you'll need to install a whole house humidifier or separate mini-splits to heat the room. Cooling If a room is smaller than 20m3 the mini-split system will only be able to cool it 20m3 – 30m3 requires a whole-house diffuser, 30m3 – 40m3 requires a whole-house diffuser and a room diffuser. 40m3 – 50m3 requires a room diff
